Example

An example: the 20-franc coin (more known under the name of Napoleon).
The coin weighs 6.45 grams and contains 5.8 grams of gold.

The quotation in the Paris Stock Exchange gives a value 61.9€ to the Napoleon, and the gold contained in the coin has a value 62.98 euro. Be careful!! it is a theoretical value at the precise moment between a seller and a buyer. But if you buy a Napoleon below 62.98 euro, it is less than the value of the gold that it contains.

Coins globally have no premium or a very weak premium, that is we do not more pay dearly a coin than a piece of raw gold. This is a temporary abnormality which should evolve bit by bit with the price increase of the gold. In 1980, the napoleon had a premium of almost 100 % on the price of the raw metal, today this premium completely disappeared, for how long?

Gold coins still have no extra premium and it should not last Eternally with the increase of the price of the gold. Golden coins should see "mechanically" their price rising with the increase of the gold and the second reason so that the price horsemanship it is that their premium is in most low.
